THE DESIGN

Arches to view different aspects of the garden, yet practical enough to push a lawn mower through.

Pillars of kisses topped by a hug, reminiscent of my Mother's sign off on her letters xoxoxox.

Charles cleverly designed a structure complete with an umbrella shaped hat for an aesthetic structure in the bare winter months.

THE STORY

We had always lived in period characterful houses, but in 2006 we moved to a boxy new build detached house, a lovely location but everything about it was square in shape, with no garden or planting.

It was exciting to have a blank canvas but being south facing we urgently needed shade. Staring out of one of the second floor windows onto mud, an idea landed!

Soften all the hard shapes by designing 3 interlinking circles of different sizes. Both lawns would only be accessible through a central arbour

This would provide shade and a focal point until trees were established.

The lawns were marked out, borders planned around the soft curves and slate laid in the middle, edged with reclaimed bricks from a local brick works, waiting in anticipation for a central arbour.

A family gift arrived to be used in memory of my father and so the design began. His lifetime of stamp collecting traded for a living memorial.

THE PLANTING

The spring hosts a splash of clematis blue that gently winds up though the pillars of kisses, their seeds heads catch the light in the early autumn evenings.

White wisteria is a show stopper as june begins, and provides a heady fragrance to the outdoor room. We find it hard to tear ourselves away on those early mild summer evenings, we lean back on our chairs and gaze at the illuminated blooms against the night sky.

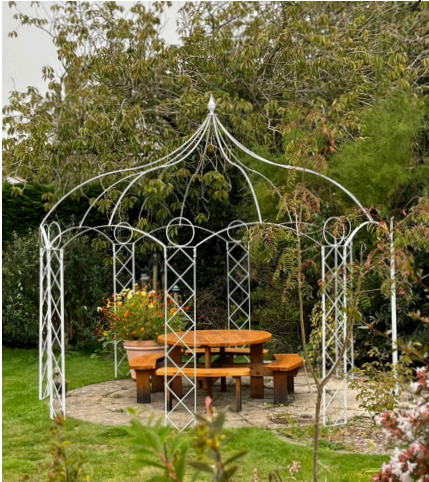

Blush white roses take over through the summer months until the first frosts. I had overplanted and so the elegance turns to a punk look but is beautiful from bedroom windows.

GARDEN FEATURE

This arbour has become a haven, an oasis of life, to saunter over with a cuppa at early dawn and relish the songbirds solitude before the world crashes in with it's own noise.

Many memories with family, friends, quiet chats, afternoon teas, evening sunset drinks celebrations, 18th's, 21st's, 30th's, 50th's, anniversaries.
